Most of the mounds and earthworks that can be seen in Ohio today were made by the Hopewells. Securely dated to about 5,000 years ago around BCE in the Middle Archaic period, it consists of a formation of 11 mounds from 3 to 25 ft 1–8 m tall, connected by ridges. The Mound Builders form an oval nearly 1/2 mi. Once again great ceremonial centers were erected; once more an elaborate social system came into being; there were developments in art and technology that rivalled and often exceeded Hopewell at its finest.

Majidi also said to be the inventor of the compass. Ferrand, Bornin Smith has a book. The canoes they built from gigantic trees were as big as the boats sailed to America by Columbus. Otto and Brian G. Abelard Tomlinson, a member of the family that owned the property on which the Temple Mound was located. Jesse and Abelard Tomlinson, and Thomas Briggs gutted the mound, destroying much of the Mound Builders archaeological evidence provided by the scientific study of other mounds. The Creek, Chickasaw, and Choctaw Indians who occupied the Southeast when the Europeans came were in all likelihood the unknowing descendants of the Temple Mound folk.
