Babies without borders: Rescue, Kidnap and the Symbolic Child. Drawing especially on Continental social thought, including Wittgenstein, Merleau-Ponty, Levinas, Dumont, Bourdieu and others, and on pre-modern sources such as the Hebrew bible, the Nuer, the Dinka, and the Azande, the book mounts a radical study of the ontology of self and other in relation to dualism and nondualism. In a completely new approach to borders and border crossing, this volume suggests a re-conceptualization of the nation in Southeast Asia.

Ethnographic studies of social life in settings as varied as nomadic Mongolia. Indeed, Agrawal has argued for greater attention to markets as a force that shapes the contexts in which common pool resources are governed. One thinks, on the one hand, of various kinds of charities but also of individual actions that are aimed to help poor urban dwellers. Issues of value, identity, and exchange are considered, furthering our understanding of how social groups create themselves through material circulation.

Along with the environmental destruction several consequential dangers is common for this frontier community, and the book follows their safari lifestyles as they construct and perform localized identities in their interactions with dangerous wildlife, the broader African community, and the global elite via their work in the nature-tourism industry.
