It is true that Claude Bernard can tell us that we are lost in hypotheses; but to conclude from this that we shall never arrive at the truth sits roman expérimental badly on him, as he has struggled all his life to make a science of medicine, which the great majority of his contemporaries look upon as an art. All that we do not know, all that escapes us still, that is truly the ideal, and the aim of our human efforts is each day to reduce the ideal, to conquer truth from the Le (French Edition).
